How does an ATC School Based Program work?

An ATC School Based Program involves generally working one day per week whilst you are completing your final years of secondary school or college. ATC matches you with an organisation that needs an apprentice or trainee and co-ordinates your work and education.

You will also be required to undertake a study component in order to gain your qualification. You can study at a training facility, on the job or complete study modules by correspondence. There may be an option or requirement to complete study modules during holidays.

ATC's Account Managers contact you every 6 to 8 weeks to monitor your progress and are only a phone call away if you have any concerns or issues.

Once you obtain the required competencies you will receive a nationally recognised qualification and be ready to progress along your career pathway.

The smart way to get started

ATC School Based Programs provide an opportunity for people to receive a nationally recognised qualification and real, paid work experience whilst completing school or college.

ATC finds organisations which will provide supervision and a safe, challenging and rewarding work environment.

ATC is the legal employer and responsible for arranging the training, monitoring progress and payment of wages.

Experience, Experience, Experience

ATC Apprentices and Trainees can undertake a qualification in a range of occupations and gain a variety of industry and administrative skills.

ATC Apprentices and Trainees gain skills that are transferrable to a number of jobs and will include communication, organisation and administration skills.
